GREAT BRITAIN.Plague in Rodents—London.

From a letter written by Dr. C. A. Moseley, a district medical officer of Jamaica, contained in the Annual Report of the Superintending Medical Officer of Jamaica for the year ended March 31, 1913, pages 2 and 3, it appears that a considerable number of plague-infected rats were found in London during 1912. The following is that part of Dr. Moseley's letter bearing on the subject:

PORT ANTONIO, April 25, 1913.

SIR: While on leave in London in July last, it occurred to me that my time might be usefully employed in obtaining as extensive a knowledge of plague as possible. * * *

Later in the year I decided to do the bacteriology and chemistry, and in fact as much of the work as I could in the three months at my disposal, for the public health diploma, this I did at St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

Here again, through the kindness of Dr. F. W. Andrews, pathologist to the hospital, I had ample opportunity to observe the post mortem appearances in rodent plague, and to follow up the bacteriological findings. For a matter of two weeks or more some six or eight rats were sent to Dr. Andrews daily for examination. With few exceptions they had all died as the result of plague. Hearing that I was interested in the matter he very kindly asked me to be present while he was doing the work in connection with them.
